DESCRIPTION

The Doric Coffee Tables take their name from the Doric order of ancient Greek - and later Roman - architecture. The oldest and least ornamental of the three Classical orders, Doric architecture is characterized by restraint, symmetry, and simplicity, with decorative features generally limited to the vertical fluting that is so closely associated with the Doric column. The defining feature of the Doric Tables is the inward curve of the legs, the result of material subtraction from a simple shape. What could have been a monolithic, hard-edged profile is given an unexpected and alluring lightness and softness by carving into each of its four legs - a contemporary reinterpretation of the fluted detailing often found in the Doric column. The Doric Tables are available in two sizes: a square version, ideal for cozy corners, and a larger oblong variant, which pairs well with longer seats and sofas.
